A photograph of a family of three—a man, a woman, and a young child—sitting together on a dark metal park bench. The man, on the left, is wearing a plaid shirt and glasses. The woman, on the right, is wearing a blue dress. The child is sitting between them, wearing a red shirt with "ROG DAYS" printed on it. They are all smiling at the camera. In the background, there is a row of modern townhouses with light-colored siding and dark window frames. A small tree and a black lamppost are also visible. The entire image has a semi-transparent blue overlay.

Providing housing assistance is one of the most effective ways to help families, children and youth escape poverty. In 2012 alone, housing assistance lifted 4 million people out of poverty, including 1.5 million children.
